

Special Issue

Advances in Functional Polymer Foams

Message from the Guest Editors

Functional polymeric foams play an important role in energy management, e.g., thermal insulation, electrical conductivity, EMI shielding performance, etc. Unlike solvent-derived synthesized aerogel foams, polymeric foams fabricated from eco-friendly supercritical foaming agents have gained attention in both academia and industry. The current and future applications of polymer foams and their superior performances in such structural and functional foams are the foci of this Special Issue. Both theoretical and experimental studies can be submitted if they present a sufficiently significant scientific innovation.
