

Special Issue

Polymer Materials in Building and Construction

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue is aimed at finding solutions to scientific and applied problems of obtaining and using polymeric materials in buildings and construction. The fundamental and applied problems of modern building materials science, building production technologies and calculation methods, the relevance of which has recently been increasing due to the rising pace of construction, are considered. This Special Issue is devoted to new production technologies, methods of calculation, design and strengthening of polymers, polymer concrete, plastic materials, products and structures with increased efficiency. The Issue welcomes articles aimed at creating new and improving existing technologies for polymer, polymer concrete, plastic materials, products and structures, improving and modernizing calculation and reinforcement methods, as well as new analytical, mathematical, chemical and experimental methods for studying the structure of polymer materials in construction.
