Women in Polymer Science and Technology: Sustainable Polymers

Message from the Guest Editors

Since the very beginning, women have made significant, outstanding contributions to the advancement of science, as well as that of technology. Nevertheless, evidence suggests that gender differences still persist in academia today. This Special Issue invites submissions by women and men working together with the aim of fighting the inequalities faced by women in the scientific field and also recognizing women's abilities and their contributions to science. Topics of interest for publication in this Special Issue include but are not limited to:

- Novel approaches and concepts, both conceptual and applied;
- Monomer syntheses from renewable resources;
- Polymerizations in solvent-free media or in solvents/media that can be recycled;
- Alternatives to environmentally harmful reaction conditions and catalysts;
- Characterization and properties of sustainable polymers vs. implemented ones;
- Life and end-of-life perspectives.

The only requirement is that the first author or corresponding author be a woman.
