Polymers in Water Treatment

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue on “Polymers in Water Treatment” will bring together high-quality papers on the most recent advances in natural-material-based polymer applications for the removal capability of inorganic and organic species from water. This Special Issue is expected to include research on fundamental physical-chemical aspects of adsorption, as well as natural polymer surface modification for selectivity, characterization, and applications involving the use of these materials in the treatment of real-world samples are also encouraged.
