Message from the Guest Editor

Lactic acid bacteria are ubiquitous and have applications in almost every sector of the food industry, as well as in probiotics. They preserve, provide aromas in addition to flavors, and have proven benefits for health as well as many other areas of real and potential recent application. This Special Issue will receive quality papers that present results that allow increasing knowledge on and applications of lactic acid bacteria. Topics include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Isolation of LAB of interest from conventional or novel sources.
- Potential or actual use of LAB in food or for feeding purposes.
- LAB with interesting antimicrobial characteristics (antibacterial, antifungal, etc.).
- Identification of new LAB.
- Production of novel metabolites by LAB.
