Pharmaceutical Development and Bioavailability Analysis

Message from the Guest Editors

Nowadays, pharmaceutical development faces a large host of issues deriving from the particularities of each pharmacological active principle, from botanicals to biologics and biosimilars. In many cases, these molecules or the already formulated drugs create controversies regarding the bioavailability, interactions, novel potential mechanisms of action with consequences on their efficacy and risks. Therefore, in this Special Issue titled “Pharmaceutical Development and Bioavailability Analysis”, we encourage researchers to present the most recent studies regarding various developments in the pharmaceutical field, with a strong focus on the drugs’ bioavailability and potential effects on the formulation, delivery systems, pharmacokinetics, interactions, and preclinical and clinical significance. The manuscripts may include research articles and reviews in order to advance the pharmaceutical development.
