Interaction of Dairy Proteins and Natural Active Molecules in Food Processing Engineering

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to attract the most exciting advances in the field of Food Science and Nutrition, promoting the high-impact applications of dairy food. Topics include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Interaction behavior and mechanism of dairy proteins and natural active molecules during food processing/storage or food digestion;
- Characterization of the structure and functions of the protein complexed or conjugated with natural molecules;
- Effect of natural molecules on the nutritional value of dairy proteins or vice versa;
- Newly designed structures using dairy proteins modified with natural molecules that facilitate nutrient delivery, increase stability or assign other features.
