Exploitation and Utilization of Starch Resources in Food

Message from the Guest Editor

This special issue on “Exploitation and Utilization of Starch Resources in Food” seeks original and innovative research concerned with the functional property improvements, applications, and unconventional source of starch. However, other aspects of the study on starch resources in food are also welcome. The main areas of interest are:

- Novel methods for improving functional properties of starches;
- Process-structure-function relationships of starch at macro, micro or nanoscale;
- Interactions between starch and non-starch component (proteins, lipids, or other food components) during processing;
- Study on non-traditional starch sources with commercial potential.
