Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The scope of this issue focuses on those pre-Constantinian diversities and how particular Christian communities may have pursued the spiritual life as followers of Jesus. Original research and reviews which address the following topics are of particular interest:

- Historical accounts of pagan epistemologies that have been Christianized;
- Ancient metaphysical frameworks which adopted various early Christian teachings;
- Early Christian rituals which conversed with other local religious customs;
- Early Christian writings which amicably resourced non-Christian philosophies;
- Early Christian interpretations of Scripture which amicably engaged other local religious beliefs;
- Spiritual practices of early Christian communities and their metaphysical foundations;
- Political theologies of pre-Constantinian Christianity.
