Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This special issue explores the interdisciplinary nature of Quaker Studies and reflects on the range of methods which can be used to tease out different aspects of Quakerism. Submissions are welcome from any disciplinary background—even and perhaps especially if other researchers are surprised to learn that you are working on Quakerism! Including some explicit reflection on your methodology, how your work incorporates elements from more than one discipline, or how you use findings from one discipline to inform work in another area would be particularly welcome. Overall, the special issue will both highlight the importance of Quakers as a case study or example in many fields, and help those who are already working in Quaker Studies to get a fuller picture of the many possible approaches.

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community - disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
