

Special Issue

Religion, Gender and Social Development

Message from the Guest Editor

Religion, gender and development have always been intertwined. Religion is a powerful social phenomenon that has influenced and been influenced by cultural norms in a variety of contexts. Its influence on social behavior is evident on a global scale. Religion is not merely a factor in the social construction of behavior; it has also endorsed practices that bear significant implications for gender status and roles. The complex relationship between religion and gender, one that is often misunderstood, is a crucial consideration in today's global context, especially in the absence of a clear separation of church and state.

The editors of this journal are pleased to invite you to submit articles that explore the intersection of religion, gender and social development. We cordially invite you to contribute to this Special Issue by invoking theories, methodologies and case studies that interrogate the intersection of religion, gender and social development. To proceed, please submit an abstract of your proposed article. Following approval, you will be invited to prepare a full paper for potential publication in this journal upon completion of the peer review process.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
