

Special Issue

Faith, Law, and Public Life: Transboundary Legal Responses to Both Secular and Religious Fundamentalism

Message from the Guest Editors

We are pleased to invite you to contribute to this Special Issue of Religions, which seeks to map and critically evaluate the legal and policy responses to both secular and religious fundamentalism, with particular attention to their transboundary character and implications for public life.

The scope aligns with journals that publish cutting-edge work in constitutional and administrative law, human rights law, international and comparative law, socio-legal studies, political science, and public policy. Contributions should centre on legal responses and their regulatory (both private and public law), or governance implications, while engaging (where relevant) with empirical evidence, doctrinal analysis, or interdisciplinary insights. We particularly welcome studies that connect local or national measures to regional and international frameworks (e.g., European, Inter-American, African, or comparative transnational perspectives), and that address the tensions between safeguarding fundamental rights—such as freedom of religion or belief, expression, equality, and non-discrimination—and countering harmful or exclusionary practices and discourses.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
