Religious Ethics in a Conflicted World

Message from the Guest Editors

Religious ethics can act as a methodology for inter-religious and inter-cultural dialogue, as well as a catalyst for an encounter with the other. On the other hand, religious ethics may provide the (subliminal) rationale for political theology and, thus, ideology, identity politics, and mechanisms of re-feudalization. However, in aiming for practice, religious ethics function as a middle ground between individual/collective conviction and social/political duties. This in-between state of the subjective and objective sphere adds to the ambiguity; yet, it makes religious ethics an important aspect of socio-political processes. Hence, this MDPI Special Issue seeks to investigate the complex phenomenon of “Religious Ethics in a Conflicted World” on three levels: (1) the discussion of religious ethics on a conceptual level in order to determine their ambiguity in a modern world of conflict; (2) the investigation of mechanisms of institutionally applied religious ethics on the socio-political level; (3) the presentation and discussion of (inter-)national cases with a focus on the role of religious ethics in endeavors of reconciliation and conflict resolution.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
