

Special Issue

Gender, Religion, and Disasters: Experiences, Practices, and Transformations in the 21st Century

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue will focus on the intersections of gender, religion, and disasters in the 21st century. Disasters are caused by natural and technological hazards, as well as human-induced like wars, and result in large-scale disruptions to the affected communities. Global climate change has compounded the severity and impact of disasters in vulnerable communities. Despite the challenges caused by extreme weather events, for example, religion remains central to coping and building resilience. Recent studies indicate that “people become more religious when hit by natural disasters” (Bentzen 2019). Do women, men, or gender-diverse individuals demonstrate differences in religiosity before, during, and after disasters occur? Examining gender identities and differences in the context of disasters has not been fully explored, or, according to Sohrabizadeh and Jazani (2018), has “attracted very little attention”. This Special Issue intends to fill in the gap in the scholarly literature at this most compelling time when wars, pandemics, and natural catastrophes are in our midst.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
