

Special Issue

Sport and Religion: Continuities, Connections, Concerns

Message from the Guest Editor

The literature on theology, religion and sport is expanding rapidly. As well as treatments of theological themes such as sin and salvation, anthropologies, gender, and worship, scholars are increasingly mining historical resources as well as considering ethical matters through explicitly religious lenses. Much of this work is inter-disciplinary in nature. This issue will seek both to reflect upon the current state of research in the field and suggest new directions of travel and in this manner it will serve not only to gather and review current research but also indicate new possibilities through both initial work and programmatic suggestions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
