

Special Issue

Christianity in Scotland in the Long 20th Century

Message from the Guest Editors

The journal will focus on issues relating to the history of Christianity in Scotland in the 20th century. This will include articles relating to history, sociology, theology and literature, exploring the way in which Christianity has declined in its overall significance in the Scottish nation. The scope of the journal will not only examine the place of the Church of Scotland (still the major denomination in the country) but also incorporate articles on Baptist, Brethren, Charismatic and other dissenting presbyterian groups within the country. In addition, several thematic articles will address the role of women and the future and nature of ordained ministry in the 21st century. The journal will supplement various books and articles on these topics such as those by Steve Bruce and Calum Brown.
