Historical Network Analysis in the Study of Chinese Religion

Message from the Guest Editor

Historical network analysis is a method that uses metrics and visualization techniques from graph theory to deepen our understanding of the past. Increasingly, over the last three decades, historical sources have been digitized and aggregated. There is a growing number of datasets that enable us to apply network analysis and reveal patterns that can corroborate or contradict existing historical narratives. Although the term "network" is often used in the study of religion, there have been few efforts to utilize the recent advances in data and the availability of tools to apply formal network analysis to the field. This Special Issue invites articles that use network data, metrics, and visualizations to gain new insights into religious history.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
