Restoring Our Spirits with the New Testament: Spirituality in Biblical Research

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue focuses on the integration of New Testament studies and spirituality, on how a careful reading of the New Testament informs authentic spirituality, spiritual practice, and spiritual restoration in the Christian tradition. In what ways does a serious study (historico-grammatically) of the New Testament lead to spiritual transformation? What might be learned and practiced from a critical study of prayer, scripture reading, liturgical practices, discipleship, community, and spirituality? What methods of interpretation might subvert a knowledge-based elitism in favor of spiritual vitality? And how does the study of these ancient texts and traditions form the contemporary practice of spirituality? These (and other) questions form the core of this Special Issue. We look forward to receiving your contributions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
