Special Issue

Links Between Psychology/Psychiatry and Religion

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue explores the intersection of religion and spirituality, and psychology/psychiatry, two fields often seen as opposing. Religion and spirituality focus on spiritual growth and the divine, while psychology/psychiatry aim to enhance mental health and life quality. Despite historical tensions, both share a focus on human relationships, individuality, and selfawareness. This issue invites scholars to explore how these disciplines can collaborate to foster human wellbeing, with psychology/psychiatry supporting spiritual growth and religion offering insights into human purpose. We seek contributions that examine how these fields can communicate and complement each other to benefit those in need. For suggested themes and article types for submissions, please visit the Special Issue homepage. We look forward to receiving your contributions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community - disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
