

Special Issue

Nature, Functions and Contexts of Christian Doctrine

Message from the Guest Editors

The nature, status, and functions of Christian doctrine are widely and energetically discussed in contemporary theology. This Special Issue welcomes submissions that emerge from this broad framework and/or address topics such as the following:

- The relationship between change, constancy, and diversity in Christian doctrine, especially in relation to climate, sexuality, gender, and race;
- Critical studies of recent proposals (e.g., Christine Helmer, Mike Higton, David Bentley Hart, Anne E. Carpenter, Willie James Jennings);
- How biblical exegesis is employed in constructive doctrinal work;
- Studies of particular doctrinal loci in particular contexts;
- The role of doctrine in making Christian truth claims;
- The role of particular doctrines in forming, deforming, and reforming the Christian imagination;
- The role of, or the impact of, certain doctrines in inter-religious encounters.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
