

Special Issue

When Worlds Collide: Religion, Politics, and Society in a Globalized World

Message from the Guest Editor

The aim of this Special Issue of Religions is to explore the influence of religion in shaping modern politics, societies, and international relations. The interdisciplinary approach via which political science is studied through the prism of religion is still, to a significant degree, rather scarce. Considering the apparent relevance of religion in contemporary political processes, this may seem unexpected and in need of explanation. I would suggest that political science in the interdisciplinary context is often studied together with other social sciences and humanities, such as history, geography, philosophy, law, economics, anthropology, sociology, linguistics, communication and media studies, etc. We considered all of these factors while devising this Special Issue of Religions. Therefore, we are pleased to welcome scholars with expertise in the three major monotheistic religions, namely Judaism, Christianity and Islam, or theology and political science in general, to submit their research regarding the interaction among religion, politics, and society in our globalized world.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
