

Special Issue

Spirituality and Aging: Finding Meaning in the Context of Personal and Societal Change

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue of Religions will be of interest within many disciplines, from religious studies and theology to psychology, sociology, and the humanities, as well as the clinical world of pastoral care, chaplaincy, nursing, palliative care, social work, spiritual direction, spiritually integrated psychotherapy, etc. In this Special Issue, we will hear from those who research and study spirituality and aging, but also from practitioners. It will encourage and inspire those who live and work with older adults, in faith communities, in residential care, and all of us as we grow older ourselves. It will also help policy-makers better understand the essential nature of spiritual care in later life. This Special Issue will focus on the importance of spirituality and spiritual care for long life, exploring

- sources of inner strength and resilience in later life;
 - the role of community/belonging/trust; and
 - what the intersections of spirituality and aging teach us (older adults and younger adults) about being more fully human—in our vulnerability, compassion, mortality
- ...

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
