

Special Issue

Chinese Christianity: From Society to Culture

Message from the Guest Editor

We are pleased to invite you to submit research to a Special Issue entitled “Chinese Christianity: From Society to Culture”. To fit in our academic interests, the subject of the submitted papers may vary: conversions, conversations, communications, translations, accomodations or confrontations related Christian churches and organizations in China’s local society are all welcomed. Theological studies related to local society and culture are encouraged, as well as other topics. Articles which use multiple methodologies, such as anthropological, sociological or archival, are suitable too. Research areas may include the following:

- Jesuits’ contribution in translation and their role in the transition of Late Ming and Early Qing culture and society;
- Protestant missionaries’ activities and their effects on national, regional and local levels since the Late Qing period to modern day;
- Christian communities and their relations with local society and culture;
- Studies regarding the nativization or contextualization of theology, rite, architecture, arts and customs.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
