Tracing Early Monastic Culture: Books and Authority in New Textual Communities

Message from the Guest Editors

This Topical Collection seeks contributions on textual practices and their role in the development of monastic ideals, particularly relating to authority, in Late Antiquity and the Early Middle Ages (c. 300–800). Studies on monastic rules, which typically deal with obedience, have a place in this issue, alongside other kinds of texts by early ascetic writers, in which ascetic ideals and ideas of spiritual authority are expressed—for example, in exegetical and hagiographical works. Original research articles are welcome on areas that may include (but are not limited to) the following:

- Textual communities in Late Antiquity and the Early Middle Ages;
- Early sources (monastic and non-monastic) for Western monasticism and their reappropriation;
- The transmission of the Greek paideia and the idea of the monastery as a school;
- Reception of ancient texts, including practices of reading, translating, and rewriting;
- Different ideas and expressions of monastic authority;
- Reinterpretation of philosophical and theological inheritance.

Deadline for abstract submission: December 1, 2024

Deadline for full manuscript submission: June 1, 2025
