

Special Issue

Religion in the Contemporary Transformation Society

Message from the Guest Editors

Society is constantly transforming, but there are historical periods when the transformation is so intense that it becomes explosive. Today's transformation of society is the imposition (or bifurcation point) of the rapid development of smart technologies, leading to the transition to a smart society; globalization processes and increased resistance to national identity; secularization and post-secularization processes. The focus of our issue is religion, its state in this transformational pressure. The purpose of the special issue is to unite the efforts of scientists of various disciplines to comprehend the place and role of religion in the intensive process of transformation of society. Modern studies of the last ten years are more focused on specific problems that arise "here and now": religion and migration processes, religion and gender, etc. Special attention will be paid to contributions that offer evidence of potential or real social impact that guarantees the improving of people's lives.
