

Special Issue

Worldwide Research on Resources in Social Science

Message from the Guest Editors

Sustainability, local development, and ecology are keywords that cover a wide range of fields of research, including both experimental and social sciences. The transversal nature of this area creates synergies but also divergences, making a continuous review of the existing literature necessary to facilitate research. In recent years, there has been an increasing number of articles that analyze trends in literature and the state-of-the-art in any subject. This Special Issue of Resources seeks to discover future research lines for natural resources as well as to analyze past research from economic, social, and environmental perspectives. Of particular interest is theoretical research about the retail sector, local development, and sustainability. Bibliometric methods are especially welcome.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Responsible prosperity is underpinned by sustained access to resources. Resources, publishes excellent science and scholarship which transforms understanding, practices and policies for conserving all natural resources—from water, land and air; to plant and animal biodiversity; to minerals and energy and their interconnection across scales. Significantly, we invite high quality submissions from natural and social sciences.

Build impact from your research by submitting to Resources, an open-access journal connecting you with data, insights, ideas and evidence needed to shape a better world.
