Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

UWB radar is a new and powerful tool for non-invasive and non-intrusive measurements based on microwave electromagnetic fields and signal processing. Sensors with this technology are used for both short- and long-term monitoring and surveillance measurements exploiting remote sensing methodologies.

This Special Issue on UWB Systems in Biomedical Sensing invites unpublished papers exploring recent advances and developments in healthcare applications of UWB bioengineering measurement devices and related electronic implementation. This issue accepts both high-quality articles containing original research results and review articles and will allow readers to learn more about the potentials of UWB sensors in bioengineering devices.
