Digital Health Revolution: Advances in Wearable, Epidermal and Implantable Sensors for Medical Applications

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to gather novel contributions to the field of wearable, epidermal, and implantable sensors for medical applications. Papers that highlight novel hardware and/or methodological developments, validation of these technologies in human subjects, and systematic reviews of the literature are encouraged. Papers that describe new approaches to collecting and analyzing multimodal data or novel physiological variables are of particular interest. Where appropriate, we strongly encourage authors to deposit their source code, data, and design files in a public repository (e.g., GitHub) to help accelerate progress in this field.

With kindest regards,

Guest Editors

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Sensors is a leading journal devoted to fast publication of the latest achievements of technological developments and scientific research in the huge area of physical, chemical and biochemical sensors, including remote sensing and sensor networks. Both experimental and theoretical papers are published, including all aspects of sensor design, technology, proof of concept and application. Sensors organizes Special Issues devoted to specific sensing areas and applications each year.
