Recent Advances in Biomedical Imaging Sensors and Processing

Message from the Guest Editors

Recent advances in sensor technology have allowed the development of many interesting solutions to extract and process clinical information and data useful to discover significant hidden patterns, aiming to define predictive algorithms, methodologies, and tools for the prediction of anomalous behavior, for the study and the classification of diseases. Bioimaging sensors can furnish quantitative measurements to physicians that they can use in a decision support system for scientific hypotheses and medical diagnoses, treatment, and follow-up. This Special Issue aims to present and report recent advances and trends concerning novel solutions and technologies in bioimaging sensors and processing, with applications in clinical practice. About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Sensors is a leading journal devoted to fast publication of the latest achievements of technological developments and scientific research in the huge area of physical, chemical and biochemical sensors, including remote sensing and sensor networks. Both experimental and theoretical papers are published, including all aspects of sensor design, technology, proof of concept and application. Sensors organizes Special Issues devoted to specific sensing areas and applications each year.
