

Special Issue

Mobile Computing for Smart Health

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue focuses on traditional sensors (such as an accelerometer, a gyroscope, and light sensors) as well as non-traditional sensors (such as Bluetooth LE, cameras, and microphones) embedded in mobile devices, user information collection and usage pattern tracking by those embedded sensors. Other disrupt technologies incorporated with mHealth, such as blockchain. The application of mHealth and related technologies in understanding, diagnosing, and intervening various physical and mental diseases. Novel design of mobile apps that could advance the state of the art in human-computer interaction and also increase transparency, accountability, and integrity for clinical trials.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Sensors is a leading journal devoted to fast publication of the latest achievements of technological developments and scientific research in the huge area of physical, chemical and biochemical sensors, including remote sensing and sensor networks. Both experimental and theoretical papers are published, including all aspects of sensor design, technology, proof of concept and application. Sensors organizes Special Issues devoted to specific sensing areas and applications each year.
