

Special Issue

State-of-the-Art Sensors Technology in Portugal 2023

Message from the Guest Editors

Over the last decade, the scientific works have reported important developments in the field of smart environments, including both smart cities and smart homes. Thus, a new concept of smart healthcare appears to reinforce the importance of sensors as part of smart sensors and smart sensing systems that play an important role in the IoT ecosystem. The latest developments of sensing technology offer to dynamize Industry 4.0 together with IIoT implementation and also create new opportunities for processes optimization in precision agriculture. In this context, this Special Issue is calling on Portuguese researchers to contribute work associated with sensor technologies and their applications in a society. Special attention should be granted to the solutions associated with sustainable processes in industry and agriculture, taking into account the challenges regarding environmental protection and mitigating climate change.
