

Special Issue

Sensors for Biometric Recognition and Authentication

Message from the Guest Editors

This special issue focuses on new biometric modalities and recent developments in behavioral biometrics that rely on specific data technologies related to the physical, physiological, or behavioral aspects of the human body (including when in motion). Its purpose is to highlight recent advances in the development of human authentication technologies and the categorization of humans based on physiological characteristics (including predicting future behavior). Topics to be covered including, but not limited to:

- Machine learning for biometrics
- Machine learning for behavioral recognition
- Biometric Fusion framework
- A comparative study of the existing learning approaches of Behavioral Biometric Datasets

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Sensors is a leading journal devoted to fast publication of the latest achievements of technological developments and scientific research in the huge area of physical, chemical and biochemical sensors, including remote sensing and sensor networks. Both experimental and theoretical papers are published, including all aspects of sensor design, technology, proof of concept and application. Sensors organizes Special Issues devoted to specific sensing areas and applications each year.

Editor-in-Chief
