Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The technologies applied in the digital society, especially on the social media, have changed multiple factors of political communication and citizen participation. The construction of political reality is expressed, in addition to video politics, in terms such as cyber politics, which incorporates phenomena as the acquisition of accidental information or consumption on second screens. This fact has special consequences both in electoral campaigns and in the strategies of political parties. In addition, citizens have more possibilities to participate and to mobilize, and this fact influences the perception of political events and democracy. Several investigations show that the consumption of political information in social media causes polarization and radicalization in audiences, especially in imperfect democracies.

The objective of this special issue is to analyze the types of political communication and the ways of participating in digital societies. We mainly accept systematized theoretical review articles or articles with traditional methodology (content analysis, surveys, interviews, network analysis, etc.).

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
