Tourism, Urban Culture and Local Development

Message from the Guest Editor

The rapid and sustained growth of tourism has had an uneven impact on cities, countries, and regions around the world, but there are today few places left on the planet that are not subject to what the sociologist John Urry refers to as the "tourist gaze." Photo-clicking tourists can now be found just about everywhere, including in war zones, the most remote rainforests, far beneath the surface of the Earth's oceans and seas, and even in outer space. Indeed, given the development and growth of space tourism, the tourism industry can now be said to have transcended the moniker of a global industry. For this special edition of Societies, the editors are seeking theoretically informed articles that highlight the many links among tourism, culture, and local economic development. Individual case studies of specific neighborhoods, cities, regions, or countries are welcome, as are those that underline the dilemmas local officials may face as they attempt to harness the benefits of tourism while minimizing the industry's more problematic effects.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
