

Special Issue

Public Health, Well-Being and Environmental Justice

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue highlights how public health, well-being and environmental justice are interwoven. Environments degraded due to historical social inequities, climate change and human disasters are not equally distributed and result in unhealthy populations with maladaptive coping strategies. The lack of education, investment and advocacy can result in damaged health and reduced life expectancy. This Special Issue welcomes papers connecting the lived environment and context in relation to health outcomes. The focus will be urban areas with dense populations and can include topics on access to healthy food, transportation, health education, housing, invisible toxins, healthcare access, war, trauma, gun violence and maternal child health. This Special Issue will contribute to existing discussions in the area by the means of contemporary case studies in the form of articles or conceptual papers. Special attention will be given to articles with original data that discuss both the etiology and epidemiology of the issue as well as its remediation.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
