Migrants, Refugees and Labor Markets: International Perspectives on Inclusion and Exclusion in the New Millennium

Message from the Guest Editors

The ways that immigrants are incorporated into the economy—or excluded—determines their class status and social mobility, physical and mental health, residential segregation or spatial assimilation, group memberships (e.g., union vs. non-union), and countless other opportunities and outcomes. Scholarship focusing on migrants' distinct pathways of incorporation highlights the significance of politics and place (defined by national and regional boundaries as well as the urban/rural divide), race/ethnicity, gender, language, immigration status, and other social/legal factors that shape their experience. This Special Issue has an interdisciplinary and international perspective. We aim to collect papers that examine the labor market experiences of migrants and refugees from distinct methodological, theoretical, and geographic standpoints. We are especially interested in exploring the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the dynamics of labor market incorporation for migrants and refugees.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
