Health Psychology and Psychological Health in Contemporary Society

Message from the Guest Editors

Health psychology and, more generally, well-being, health, ability to cope with stressful events (both personal and social), etc., currently represent a very attractive field of studies for international scholars. The current Special Issue aims to collect original articles that embrace these issues by extending the horizon of investigation to topics such as: - Health, well-being, life quality, and stress management in relation to both physical and psychological problems, which may impact individuals over their entire life span; - Health and emotional well-being in children, adolescents, and their family members, also when a physical or mental disease affects one of them; - Health and emotional well-being of elderly people, their caregivers and family members; - Health, well-being and coping strategies used to face stressful events, particularly impacting specific professional categories (social and health workers, teachers, etc.); - Health-related communication in professional, non-professional, and media contexts; - Relations between health psychology and social media.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
