Child Protection and Child Welfare

Message from the Guest Editor

In Anglophone countries, child protection systems are at something of a crossroads. The template for child protection has changed little since the 1960s, and there is significant debate internationally over the need for a paradigm shift. Furthermore, the targeting of problem families as the source of social ills connects with liberal politics, the capitalist social form, and the eugenic populationist approaches to poverty that emerged in the late nineteenth century.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
