Representations of Transmodern War Contexts in English Literature

Message from the Guest Editor

The proposed Special Issue “Representations of Transmodern War Contexts in English Literature” aims to analyze the transmodern or contemporary discourse(s) within what we might call war and post-war literature. That is, it will explore the different types of discourse in English literary texts that represent contemporary contexts or warlike and post-war scenarios, or that use them as discursive rhetorical frames. Among the topics dealt with in these discursive frameworks are subjects as diverse as multinational conflicts; the global implications of wars; international terrorism; wars with ISIS (Islamic State in Iraq and Syria) and aka Daesh; the war in Syria; the recruitment of (diverse) soldiers; international migration caused by armed conflicts; peace agreements; the political use of post-truth; the special vulnerability of certain groups of the population to international conflicts; the transmodern transfiguration of current geopolitics; the reconfigurations of identity related to reterritorialization; the hypothetical future of war and peace; human development; the conflict between the Western world and Islam; etc.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
