Workplace Health Promotion, Workplace Bullying and Workplace Wellness

Message from the Guest Editors

The impact of workplace bullying and harassment on the health and wellbeing of workers is unequivocal; meta-analyses of both cross-sectional and longitudinal studies demonstrate a robust relationship between the experience of being bullied and a range of health difficulties (Nielsen and Einarsen, 2018). Demonstrated across diverse occupations, sectors, and cultures, this is one of the most well-established findings in the workplace bullying literature. However, there is still a lot we do not know about health and bullying; pathways between the experience and the outcome, the role of identity disruption, the role of gender, and the contribution ethical climate could help toward a much-needed intervention.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
