On top of this, we seek articles that shed light on factors that may influence the images held, to further understand the diversity within groups in view of older adults. This aspect of images of older adults has received relatively little attention thus far, mainly because of a predominance of larger-scale studies of an explorative nature. These studies do not address various societal roles that older adults can fulfill at the same time and the complexity of their identities shaped by the categories of difference such as sex, gender, ethnicity, SES and others. Such an intersectional lens will help us to further understand the mechanisms at play when images of older adults are shaped.
