Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The goal of this Special Issues is to critically analyze the implications of the increased solidification of national borders that we are currently experiencing worldwide. We invite submissions on:

- The rise of the modern nation-state and the birth of borders.
- The historical connection between nation-building, contention, and border policing.
- The spread of discourses around “border security.”
- The military and civilian surveillance of political borders.
- The effect of border discourse on everyday interactions away from border regions.
- Theoretical and methodological innovations to transcend methodological-nationalism.
- Connections between categorical inequality and immigrant exclusion.
- What could be feasible alternatives to the international system of nation-states?

We aim to produce a high-quality Special Issue with contributions from scholars with an active research agenda. Papers should be written in a clear way with scholars and students in mind as well as a wider audience. The paper will be peer-reviewed, and there will be no publication costs for you.
