

Special Issue

Digitally Connected: Youth, Digital Media and Social Inclusion

Message from the Guest Editor

As of this Special Issue, I want to highlight the current research into the centrality of digital media in the lives of young people. I am seeking submissions including (but not limited to) the following themes or topics.

- How does digital media affect young people's identity, belonging, and sense of self?
- What do young people get out of digital media? How do they learn from it, and how does it enrich or hinder their lives?
- How are digital platforms and applications used in organising and lobbying by young people around special interests or hobbies?
- How do young people navigate personal relationships and social interaction through digital media?
- How do young people consume, or create, digital news and information?
- How do young people incorporate digital media in their professional lives, or in the service of their work?

Other submissions involving young people's relationships with digital media will also be considered.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international open access peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences including anthropology, criminology, economics, education, geography, history, law, linguistics, political science, psychology, social policy, social work, sociology and related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to facilitate the interaction and communication between different social scientific disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles as well as shorter Research Notes or short articles, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
