Novel Approaches to Labor Market and Health Research in an Era of Techno-Feudalism and Reconfiguring of Geopolitical Powers

Message from the Guest Editors

Labor markets worldwide are currently experiencing significant changes, especially due to the increasing influence of big technological companies and geopolitical power reconfigurations. The topics that will be covered include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Novel methodological approaches to studying non-standard employment and the related health outcomes;
- Recent trends in non-standard forms of employment and their effects on worker health and wellbeing;
- Factors that trigger and facilitate non-standard employment and their relationship with worker health and wellbeing;
- Less explored forms of non-standard employment;
- Barriers to applying labor and occupational health and safety legislation in non-standard forms of employment;
- How non-standard forms of employment interact with worker health and wellbeing;
- The differential impact of non-standard forms of employment on worker health and wellbeing;
- The cumulative and long-term effects of non-standard forms of employment on worker health and wellbeing etc.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international, open access, peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences, including anthropology, economics, law, linguistics, education, geography, history, political science, psychology, sociology, and other related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to encourage creative, innovative, and critical reflections across social science disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles, shorter Research Notes or articles, as well as Special Issue submissions, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
