Contemporary Community Social Services: Issues and Challenges

Message from the Guest Editors

Social protection systems are facing the need to redefine their models of social intervention, moving toward frameworks that are more sustainable, equitable, and resilient. These transformations require a renewed commitment to fostering evidence-based innovation, both scientifically, methodologically, and institutionally, to enhance the quality and impact of care and interventions in community social services. This Special Issue aims to contribute to the advancement of knowledge and development of community social services through the compilation of empirical studies, systematization of scientific contributions and practical experiences, as well as critical and constructive reflections, in the form of original articles and reviews. Therefore, it seeks to address the current frontier of knowledge from national, regional, or international perspectives.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international, open access, peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences, including anthropology, economics, law, linguistics, education, geography, history, political science, psychology, sociology, and other related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to encourage creative, innovative, and critical reflections across social science disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles, shorter Research Notes or articles, as well as Special Issue submissions, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
