

Special Issue

Migration and Housing

Message from the Guest Editors

The Special Issue will explore the intersections between migration and housing. To understand why migration and housing have become such a contentious area, this Special Issue focuses on the following topics: power and the social structures that act to exclude, control and punish migrant groups (and how these forces can be resisted); intersectionality and the role of housing in social identity and power; control and precarity amongst migrant groups; citizenship and the struggle for housing rights; migration and housing market dynamics; young people, homeownership inaccessibility and intergenerational housing wealth; housing disadvantage amongst highly skilled migrants and international students; and policy and practice interventions to address housing precarity and homelessness amongst migrant groups. This Special Issue invites theoretical and empirical contributions looking at causality, dynamics and the role housing that plays in the experience of migration. Papers are encouraged that utilise interdisciplinary work, both in theory and method, and we are particularly interested in papers that contribute to debates and geographies that have been relatively understudied.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international open access peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences including anthropology, criminology, economics, education, geography, history, law, linguistics, political science, psychology, social policy, social work, sociology and related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to facilitate the interaction and communication between different social scientific disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles as well as shorter Research Notes or short articles, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
