Populations Rendered ‘Surplus’ in Canada

Message from the Guest Editor

SURPLUS, in addition to the commonly associated meanings of profit and value, can be more broadly construed as excess or excessive, as surfeit, or what is leftover, or unwanted: an excess of emotions (anger, fear, passion, desire). Canada has long been and debatably inaccurately characterized as more welcoming, having fewer racists, and more inclusive than other Western countries.

This Special Issue of Social Sciences seeks to address the challenges faced by Canada’s displaced, marginalized, erased, racialized, and disadvantaged populations. We welcome submissions from all fields and disciplines related to the social sciences, such as migration and immigration studies, political science, sociology, sexuality studies, settler and colonialism studies, education, health care, LGBTQ+ Studies, Black Studies, ethnic studies, etc. A multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary engaged approach is welcome.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international open access peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences including anthropology, criminology, economics, education, geography, history, law, linguistics, political science, psychology, social policy, social work, sociology and related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to facilitate the interaction and communication between different social scientific disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles as well as shorter Research Notes or short articles, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
