Achieving Sustainability through Educational Advances: Deep Dives into Social, Economic, and Environmental Perspectives

Message from the Guest Editors

Sustainable development comprises three fundamental dimensions—social, economic, and environmental—that are essential for harmonious coexistence in modern society. Education, with its broad spectrum of specialties and approaches, plays a pivotal role in this realm, not only mirroring these dimensions but also acting as a catalyst for their integration and advancement. This Special Issue will explore how various educational specialties specifically address each of these dimensions, both individually and collectively. Potential topics include (but are not limited to):

- Approaches from different specialties to the social dimension of sustainable development.
- The economic dimension in specific curricula.
- Integration of environmental aspects from specific educational perspectives.
- The challenges and approaches of each dimension according to the educational specialty.
- Case studies focused on a single dimension from various specialties.
