Exploring Social Work Interventions in Health, Education, and Social Care to Promote Community and Individual Wellbeing

Message from the Guest Editors

Social work interventions to promote wellbeing are undertaken in a variety of settings such as health, education, and social care. In a world that is impacted by climate change, austerity issues, economic crisis, war, and natural disasters, social workers need to develop culturally competent practices with different communities and service users with diverse clinical and social needs. This Special Issue invites contributions from an international audience that captures the richness and diversity of social work in all its forms. It recognises that within social work, social workers can be agents for change as activists or can be boundaried by the mandates of the state; however, social work is both an academic and practical discipline underpinned by a commitment to social justice and community and individual empowerment. This Special Issue hopes to capture contributions which show the scope of social work and its different forms of intervention, highlighting it as a practice and academic discipline within health, education, and social care that promotes both individual and community wellbeing.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international open access peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences including anthropology, criminology, economics, education, geography, history, law, linguistics, political science, psychology, social policy, social work, sociology and related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to facilitate the interaction and communication between different social scientific disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles as well as shorter Research Notes or short articles, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
