Diversifying Images of Older Adults

Message from the Guest Editors

On top of this, we seek articles that shed light on factors that may influence the images held, to further understand the diversity within groups in view of older adults. This aspect of images of older adults has received relatively little attention thus far, mainly because of a predominance of larger-scale studies of an explorative nature. These studies do not address various societal roles that older adults can fulfill at the same time and the complexity of their identities shaped by the categories of difference such as sex, gender, ethnicity, SES and others. Such an intersectional lens will help us to further understand the mechanisms at play when images of older adults are shaped. About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international, open access, peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences, including anthropology, economics, law, linguistics, education, geography, history, political science, psychology, sociology, and other related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to encourage creative, innovative, and critical reflections across social science disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles, shorter Research Notes or articles, as well as Special Issue submissions, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
